WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

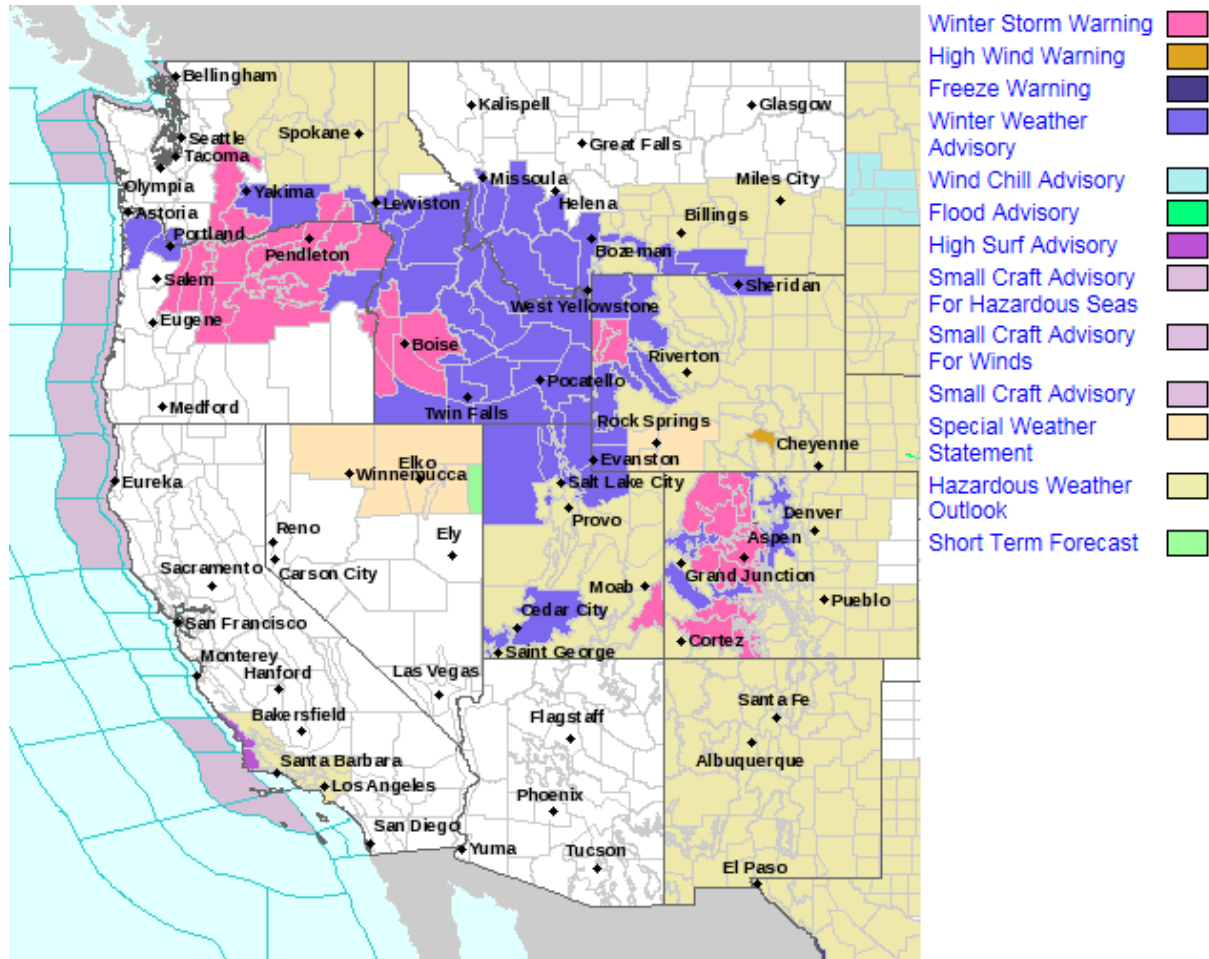

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A weather system will be moving inland today with most precipitation occurring this morning before tapering off through tonight as the ridge rebuilds. A drier system will drop south over the area with shower activity over the northern mountains into Saturday followed by breezy north to northeast winds Saturday night into early Monday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A blocking weather pattern consuming the western 2/3rds of the United States will set the stage for a potentially strong offshore wind event early next week, but the rest of this week will remain partly cloudy and cool as a weak storm system continues to push inland today. Some light rain will continue this morning across the far northern portion of the district, including Monterey County and the Sierras north of Fresno County. In general, rainfall in these areas since midnight has reached a tenth of an inch near Big Sur, a quarter of an inch in the Sierra National Forest and up to a half inch in Yosemite National Park. Look for another tenth of an inch in these areas before rain tapers off this afternoon. Gusty northwest winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 45 mph will be possible in and near the deserts this afternoon. Temperatures will remain in the lower 70's in the valleys to the 50's in the mountains today. Friday and Saturday will be less windy and slightly warmer as high pressure begins to build off the coast. Sunday, a fresh surge of cold air is expected to quickly drop into the Great Basin and Rockies west of the Divide which will allow for a strong offshore pressure gradient to develop. Offshore winds look to increase during the day Sunday, possibly becoming strong by Sunday afternoon or evening. The winds may favor north-south running canyons initially before the pressure gradient turns more northeasterly Sunday afternoon or evening. Therefore, the strongest winds during the day Sunday may occur over northern Los Angeles County and Ventura County before the offshore winds spread southward to include the rest of southern California Sunday evening. This offshore wind event has the potential be quite strong with wind gusts exceeding 50 mph by Sunday afternoon into Monday. Well above normal temperatures with relative humidity values in the single digits may occur by Sunday afternoon or Monday. Winds may weaken Monday afternoon, but an offshore wind component may remain in place through Tuesday. A weak and poorly organized system may bring onshore flow and light showers to the area next Wednesday, but no significant wetting rains are expected over southern California during the next 7-10 days.
